in people with raynaud's disease, blood flow is temporarily decreased to the fingers, and sometimes the nose, ears, toes, nipples, or knees in response to a trigger such as cold or stress

there are several low-cost, over-the-counter antacid medications that can help control symptoms, such as tums, rolaid and maalox.